Mr. Hugh Blair rext a very learned and interesting paper on fermentation and germicities and was appianted at the close. Dr. Hogo was absent and Dr. Wellford replied to Mr. Biair on the germ theory. He was not convanced, it believed in becilit, but did not think their presence in cholera was procen to be the cause of the disease. Dr. Wellford read from the Medical Journal a resume of the Hamburg epidemic, in which all germicides and antiseptics had been by unanimous consent absandoned as useless in combatting cholera, and that there was only operemely accepted by all the doctors and that was calomal (applicated by Dr. Parker). This has always been the opinion of Richmond doctors where the doctors are the doctors and that was been the opinion of Richmond doctors where the doctors are the doctors and that was read the disease. The Hamburg doctors on the doctors of the doctors are signed him in the detaite, and read a moet expansive paper on cholera, its symptoms, treatment, &c., &c. He exhibited under a 800-power pieroscope a cholera baccilius known as the "cemma baccilius" (like a comma in shape), the only one in the South. This was sent him from Berlin. A recess was taken to that the large number of doctors present might see it. Some could and others could not make out the little object. It requires a practiced eye eftent to see this minute object even under a microscope.

The dissussion was continued at great length.
